Co-chaired the U.S. Department of Defense Task Force on Domestic Violence (DTFDV). The Task Force examined the responses to both offenders and victims, made nearly 200 recommendations for improvement of systems and collaboration with civilian groups, and reported annually to Congress. While this was a three-year project, the U.S.

¹ Estimates each officer from a rural area responds to five calls a month (60 per year), while those from urban areas respond to as many as five a week (250 per year).

² Estimates each train-the-trainer participant trains at least five others; the impact may be much greater.

³ Estimates each offer from a small installation/community responds to give calls a month (60 per year), while those from larger installations/more urban areas may respond to as many as 10 per week (500 per year).

⁴ Estimates each train-the-trainer participant trains at least five others; the impact may be much greater.

Department of Defense (DoD) and Congress continually conferred with the National Center as they implemented the recommendations. The National Center collaborated with numerous organizations across the country to implement the Task Force's training recommendations for military law enforcement, chaplains, Family Advocacy Staff, JAG officers and command staff. In addition, as the military started responding to sexual violence within their own ranks, the National Center provided consultation, expertise and assistance to DoD's Task Force for the Care of Victims of Sexual Assault.

Launched the Military/Civilian Coordinated Community Response to Domestic Violence Demonstration Project with the Battered Women's Justice Project, Minneapolis, MN. The project is conducting parallel assessments of civilian/military responses and focus on civil and criminal justice intervention, medical response and services for victims and their children and perpetrators. Two models are being developed from the experiences of two jurisdictions Jacksonville, FL, with its two naval stations, JAX and Mayport, and the Army's Fort Campbell near Clarksville, TN and Hopkinsville, KY – funded by the Office on Violence Against Women and the U.S. Department of Defense.
